

REDHEAD

Aythya americana

North America

The bright red head of the male gives the species its name. Females often dump-nest, leaving some of their eggs in nests of at least 10 other duck species, so broods of mixed species are not uncommon.